HARTFORD, OHIO COUNTY, KENTUCKY, NOV. 21, 1877.

For the Hartford Herald. THE BLUSH, PERFUME AND DEW-

On the brow of the crescent cliff The beautiful village of L, The lilies, fore and mosses grow For me and my levely Nell.

There are wildwood flowers of every hue, That ned to the rippling brook— The red had, the lilse and viclet, blue, In a crystal mirror look. On afternoons and evenings bright,

By margin, we've strolled along, 'Til the morn came forth with silver light, And bushed all woodland song.

One day the mossy brink we pressed.

That hung o'er pebbled bed;
She plucked some flowers and then caressed
Their relvet leaves and said: How can the blush on thy ruby lip, And the perfume we love too well;

And the dew-drop, pearl, which faries sip
As the sun rays dance in dell— The genti fair whose eyes e'er beam, On ione neglected flowers;
From dancing ferns, came, leaped the stres
To play among our bowers.

The blush you see is a holy kiss One left upon my leaf-

The pearly daw drop-tear of grief. The roses withered in swert perfume. As in snewy fingers they lay: And dew-drops fell from out the bloom-Tears only for decay.

The teachers think of themselves in connection with a certain class-in fact, they think that they are that class. If the Professor had so expressed it, and written, "The teachers think that they are this class," unity would not have been violated, and the sentence would have passed upon him.
